Up close with a giant whale shark

IMAGINE swimming next to an animal that could fit you in his mouth and still have room to spare...

That didn't worry five-year-old snorkeller Kieran Liu, who was happy to swim next to this great whale shark.

It was the first time young American Kieran had been swimming in the open ocean.

"On the day, we were the first ones in the water," said photographer Eric Cheng.

"Kieran was suited up first and just jumped in some 20 miles from land. He was amazing, not once did he display any fear."

Luckily this 10m (40ft) long whale prefers plankton and fish eggs.

Every year in late summer, huge numbers of little tunny fish gather in the waters off Isla Mujeres in Mexico

This attracts up to 100 whale sharks at a time and a few brave humans, like Kieran, go into the water with them.

Trunk art...

KARISHMA, an Asian elephant at Whipsnade Zoo, has been showcasing her artistic talents recently.

The 13-year-old elephant grasps the paint brush with her trunk and moves it around the paper on the easel.

Elizabeth Becker, elephant keeper at the zoo, said: "Karishma really enjoys painting, and it demonstrates just how dexterous elephants' trunks really are."

The female elephant has been at Whipsnade Zoo for four years and has given birth to one baby called George.

A special event called Elephant Appreciation Day is taking place at the zoo this weekend and members of the public will be able to see Karishma's painting collection.

The appreciation day is trying to raise money for the Zoological Society of London's elephant conservation projects around the world.

Nap time at the nursery

A KEEPER tucks in a group of giant panda cubs in the research base of the Giant Panda Centre in China.

China has launched its once-a-decade panda census, to try and work out how many of the endangered animals live in the wild and how to boost their numbers.

The census is also important to find out about the pandas' living conditions, ages and if there has been any change in their habitat.

According to the count a decade ago, there are 1,596 pandas left in the wild in China.
