A Silly Student

There is a student named Barker who is a little strange. He wakes up at five in the morning, which is quite early. He always puts his socks on his shoes, and he puts his underwear over his pants, and then he takes a shower. For breakfast, he pours juice in his cereal. At five past seven, he walks to school backwards.

At school, he reads Shakespeare in his math class. In math class, he starts with the most difficult question first and never finishes. The bell rings at twenty minutes to twelve, and the students have lunch. He carefully eats his sardine, mustard sandwich. Barker is a nice kid, but it's not nice to eat sardines when others are around.
