Cousins in Space

The first day at Space Camp was busy. Tanya and Ashley both wore space suits. They climbed a zero-gravity wall wearing harnesses that held them up in the air. They felt as if they were floating in space. Tanya was excited, but Ashley felt a little sick. Later the girls built parts for a space station and exercised in a machine like a hamster's wheel.

"Aren't you glad we decided to come to Space Camp?" Tanya asked at dinner. "I loved the gravity chair that made me feel almost weightless."

"I guess so," Ashley said slowly. "I didn't like the chair, though. It made me really dizzy."

They chewed their dried space food. No one liked that very much.

The next day the girls flew an imaginary mission on a space shuttle.

Some campers acted as astronauts, while others remained on the ground to assist them. Tanya was an astronaut, and Ashley stayed on the ground. She guided the astronauts using a computer. She saved the space shuttle when it was in danger. The instructor told Ashley that she made good decisions. Tanya took off her helmet and saw that Ashley looked proud.

"Guess what?" Ashley said.

"I know—now you want to be an astronaut, just like me," Tanya said.

"Not exactly. We're both interested in space," said Ashley. "You want to be an astronaut. I want to work in mission control. We can be the first cousins in the space program. While you are up in space, I'll be on the ground assisting you. What a great way to work together!"
