JOHN KEATS

John Keats was an English poet. He published only fifty-four poems in three small books and a few magazines but had one of the most remarkable careers as a poet. He used a wide range of poetic forms including odes and sonnets.

He was born on October 31, 1795 in London, England. His father Thomas Keats died when he was just nine years old. Initially, he attended a school at Enfield which was run by John Clarke.

John Clarke's son Charles Clarke played an important role in encouraging Keats' literary aspirations.

In 1810, his mother also died and Richard Abbey was appointed as the guardian for him and his siblings. Abbey was the executor of their maternal grandmother's estate.

John Keats started his apprenticeship with a surgeon at Edmonton in 1811 but broke off in 1814. After that he moved to London and worked as a dresser for some time at Guy's and St. Thomas' hospitals. During this time, he continued his literary interests.

Keats wrote his first mature poem in 1816. It was a sonnet named as 'On First Looking into Chapman's Homer'. It was inspired by George Chapman's classic 17th-century translation of the Iliad and the Odyssey.

In March 1817, his first book got published under the name 'Poems'. His longest poems were 'Endymion' and 'Hyperion' which tell stories from ancient Greek mythology.

He only had a poetic career of five years because he died of tuberculosis at a very young age of 25 years.

He died in Rome on 23 February 1821 and was buried in Rome in a Protestant Cemetery.

His mother Frances Keats and brother Tom Keats also died of tuberculosis.
