

Reading Homework:

Jack Jouett has often been called the "Paul Revere of the South." Though there are similarities between Jouett's and Revere's contributions to the American Revolution, many people only know about Paul Revere. That may be because Revere was made famous by American poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. In his narrative poem, "Paul Revere's Ride," Longfellow told the story of Revere's midnight ride to warn colonists that the British soldiers were coming (just before the battles of Lexington and Concord). However, some people believe that Jouett's actions are just as worthy of praise as Revere's.

Below is a poem that was written about Jack Jouett that claims his early morning ride was the "greatest ride" ever seen.

Hearken good people: awhile abide
And hear of stout Jack Jouett's ride;
How he rushed his steed, nor stopped nor stayed
Till he warned the people of Tarleton's raid.

The moment his warning note was rehearsed
The State Assembly was quickly dispersed.
In their haste to escape, they did not stop
Until they had crossed the mountain top.
And upon the other side come down.

To resume their sessions in Staunton Town.

His parting steed he spurred,
In haste to carry the warning
To that greatest statesman of any age,
The Immortal Monticello Sage.

Here goes to thee, Jack Jouett!
Lord keep thy memory green;
You made the greatest ride, sir,
That ever yet was seen.

1.) Select three of the below words that let you know it was written in a different time.

warning	thee	hearken
thy	greatest	people

2.) Which of the following lines from the poem is a fact?

- a.) You made the greatest ride, sir, that ever yet was seen
- b.) They did not stop until they crossed the mountaintop
- c.) Carry the warning to that greatest statesman of any age
