Captain Matthew Webb is fortunate in being remembered as the first man to swim the English Channel, rather than the one who later tried, and failed, to plunge through the Niagara Falls. If ever a man possessed self-confidence, it was Webb; but it was his stubborn refusal to give up that eventually proved his (1. undo) _____. Unwilling to recognize the Channel crossing as the peak of his career, he went on and on, addicted to glory, literally swimming himself to death. Webb astonished the British nation on August 25th, 1875, with a Channel crossing that took a mammoth 21 hours and 45 minutes. He had entered the sea a merchant-ship captain living in (2. obscure) _____, but he emerged in France, stung by jellyfish, and half-dead with (3. exhaust) _____, a national hero. He was feted, mobbed and cheered wherever he went; his appearance in the City of London brought business to a (4. stand) _____. Alarmed by the sudden attention, the normally (5. fear) _____ Webb fled to his native Shropshire.
