

1. Reading.

Rose is an advice columnist. People write to her about their problems, and she gives advice. Read the following email to Rose. Underline the possible future situation (IF) and double underline the possible results

Dear Rose,

My friends told me that if I tell you my problem, you'll give me advice. Please help me. My problem is that two men want me to marry them, and I can't choose. Will I be happy if I choose the first man? Or if I choose the second man, will I be happier?

The first man is very good looking, and he tells me that I am beautiful. He said that he'll always want to be with me if I stay beautiful even when I'm older. If we have children together, I'm sure that our children will also be good-looking. We have different religions, but if we never talk about religion, we shouldn't have any problems concerning it.

The second man is average looking, but he is rich. He also tells me that I'm beautiful. He will buy me anything if I tell him that I like it. If his business goes well, he might become even richer. I will be very rich too if I marry him. If I'm rich, I won't have problems. We don't have a lot in common, but if we're rich, we'll be able to buy anything we want-

What should I do?

Confused in Cardiff

2. Discussion

Now, take the role of the advice columnist. Explain what would you do in her situation using the first conditional