Secret codes: A long history

For thousands of years, people have used secret codes to send messages. Only a person who knows the special code can read and understand the message.

In ancient times, there were no phones or computers. People wrote messages and gave them to a messenger. If the message was to someone far away, the messenger rode on horseback. Julius Caesar, the emperor of ancient Rome, wrote messages to his army in secret code. Sometimes the enemy caught the messenger, but they couldn't read the message because they didn't know the secret code.

- a. People have used phones to send messages (True – False)
- b. The person who is sending the message and the one who is receiving the message know the code. (True – False)
