When I was at elementary school, English was a challenging lesson for me. I had always studied hard; nevertheless, I still received red marks.

My father understood that it was because of my inability in memorizing English words. So, he made me a list of words, such as adjectives and verbs. He asked me to stick it on the wall near my study table so that I read and memorized the words every day. Besides, he would always dictate several words that I had pronounce and spell. It happened for months. In spite of being forced to read and spell words, I was happy. As a result, my vocabulary improved very significantly.

Since then, I can do English homework or assignments easily. Gradually, I can speak English and it helps me a lot at junior high school. My father is so proud of me. Now, English has become one of my favorite subjects.

I am really grateful for having a good and attentive father.
