Last summer, my family went on a trip to Paris. This was a beautiful city by the Seine River. We spent a day visiting the most famous museum - the Louvre. We went by bus and got there at nine o'clock in the morning. When we arrived, the weather was warm and the sun was shining. It was such a perfect day for photographing.

My mother pointed to the pyramid statue next to the entrance and said, 'Let's take a photo of us standing in front of the statue, son'. I agreed and took out the camera. It was new and light. My parents bought it for the trip. When I was holding it up and ready to press the button, an old woman behind my parents shouted 'Stop running! Give me back the wallet'. She was frightened and did not know what to do. It happened too quickly. A young man took it from her and ran away.

Suddenly, I had an idea. I turned on the camera and took a look at the photo of my parents. I was surprised that in the middle of the photo, there was a young man in a black T-shirt holding a pink wallet and running fast. His face was so clear that the police could find him just an hour later.

The old woman said 'Thank you for your help. I want to invite your family to come over for dinner this evening.' That day, my parents and I had a delicious meal and made a new kind friend.
