

1 Theory as Model Building

2 Young children learn much about the world around them by playing with toy 3 versions of real objects. For instance, they often put together models of cars, 4 trains, or planes. These models are far from realistic, but the model-builder learns 5 a lot from them nonetheless. The model illustrates the essence of the real object it
6 is designed to resemble. (In addition, for many children, building models is fun.)
