Leonardo da Vinci (1452 – 1519) created several notebooks filled with suprizes. At first glance, the writing looks wierd. That's because Leonardo had chozen to write backward. His famus books can only be read with a mirror. Many of the drawings in the notebooks will look famillar to us today. They include sketches of a parachute and a simple helicopter. Despite his great wizdum, his designs for flying machines are not workable. They all flapping wings require too much effort to be effective.
