FIVE-YEAR-OLD CAUGHT DRIVING PARENTS' CAR IN UTAH

Five-year-old Adrian took the family car, and was only caught when police in Utah State stopped him on the freeway. A patrolman saw the car, which was crossing lanes at 50km/h, and made the car stop. He was shocked to discover the child behind the wheel, who said he was on his way to buy a Lamborghini.

The boy told police that he had left home after his mother refused to buy him the luxury car – lower-priced models cost over $180,000 –, which caused an argument.

"He decided he'd take the car and go to a car salesman in California to buy one himself," Utah Highway Patrol said on Twitter, "but he only had 3 dollars in his wallet."

Camera footage posted by the local TV shows the car in traffic before stopping at the police signal. Highway patrol first thought it might be a driver with health problems behind the wheel. In the recording, the officer can then be heard saying "How old are you? You're five years old?" when he sees the boy. The boy was sitting at the very edge of the seat to be able to reach the pedals. He was stopped about five minutes' drive from home.

No-one was hurt in the incident. The boy's parents were at work and he was in the care of a relative when he took the car. Police asked parents to make sure car keys are not easily accessible to children.

(0) The boy was stopped by the police.

- 1) The boy told the policeman he was going to a toy shop.
- 2) The boy wanted his mother to buy an expensive car but she said 'no'.
- 3) The boy wanted to get the car as a present for his birthday.
- 4) The boy's wallet was empty.
- 5) A video recording of the incident was made.
- 6) The boy was injured in the car.
- 7) The boy's parents were interviewed by TV reporters.

THE BEST WILDLIFE PHOTOS OF THE YEAR

The Natural History Museum in London holds a yearly contest for the Wildlife Photographer of the Year, with over 10 categories. This year's contest had 49,000 entries from around the world.

This year's grand prize winner was Sergey Gorshkov's picture of a Siberian tiger. Siberian tigers are endangered; only about 500 of them live in Russia's far east. It took Mr. Gorshkov ten months to get a shot of one of them. It looks like the tiger is hugging the tree, but it's actually trying to leave its smell as a way of communicating with other tigers.

Another endangered animal, a glass frog, was a category prize winner. Jaime Culebras said he had walked for four hours in the Andes mountains in the middle of a rainstorm, before he captured the picture of the frog snacking on a spider.

Mogens Trolle won the Animal Portraits prize with his picture of a young proboscis monkey, which is sitting calmly, enjoying the sunlight with its eyes closed. Proboscis monkeys look strange because the male's nose can eventually grow so big that it hangs over its mouth and may have to be pushed aside to eat. They're endangered and only found on Borneo and the islands nearby.

There is a separate contest for people under 18, known as the Young Wildlife Photographer of the Year. In this contest, pictures are judged in three separate age groups.

In the 10 and under category, Andrés Luis Dominguez Blanco of Spain won with his picture of a bird called a "stonechat" sitting on a bending plant. He asked his father to drive him to the field, in order to use the car as a hiding place for taking photographs. Andrés managed to take the picture without scaring the bird.

Another young winner, Liina Heikkinen had spent a day watching two adult foxes bring food to their cubs. After one parent brought home a goose, the cubs fought over it. Liina took a picture of a young fox eating the goose, while hiding away from his siblings.
