

Nojoqui Falls is a special place to me because it is very beautiful, and I have good memories of visiting the falls with my parents. At the start of the trail leading to the falls, the smell and sound of oak trees and pine trees make visitors feel they're up for the journey. The sun hitting the trees makes the air fresh with a leafy aroma. Overhead, the wind blows through the leaves, making a soft noise. Closer to the waterfall, the shade from the trees creates a shielding blanket. When the sun comes out, it fills the place with light, showing the vapor coming out of the trees and plants. To the left of the trail are rocks that are positioned perfectly for viewing the waterfall. 3 Water splashes as it hits the rocks. The waterfall itself is beautiful, like a transparent, sparkling window of diamonds. The water is so clear that objects on the other side are visible. It is like a never-ending stream of water that splashes onto the rocks.
