If you travel around the world, you will learn that every country has different customs. 1 If you visit Thailand in April, you will see the Songkran celebrations – and you might get very wet! Songkran is the Thai New Year, and it is traditional to throw buckets of water at passers-by on the street! 2 Different countries have different laws, so you have to be careful. Of course, stealing and murder are illegal everywhere, but some laws are surprising. In England, if you buy a stamp with the Queen's head on it, you must make sure you stick it on your letter the right way up. It is illegal to stick the stamp on a letter upside-down. 3 4 As time passes, they are not important any more, but they have not been changed. For example, did you know that it is illegal to wear a top hat in the city of London? And in the seventeenth century Oliver Cromwell banned eating mince pies on Christmas Day. Mince pies are a traditional Christmas treat, so millions of people in the UK break that law every Christmas. 5 Since 1965 over 2,000 old laws have been changed, but there are thousands more – so be careful!
A It shows that you do not respect the Queen.
B It is what makes travelling so interesting!
C Many laws in England were made centuries ago.
If you did that in London, you might get arrested!
E There are hundreds of laws like this, which seem stupid to us now.

1 Songkran is an annual festival in Thailand. Why is it illegal to stick the stamp on a letter upside-down in England? 3 What else is forbidden in England? 4 Why many of laws need to be changed?
