- I. Oscar, the owl, had a problem. Read how his friends helped him solve his problem. Then answer the questions that follow.

Oscar was an owl. Like most owls, he had huge yellow eyes and feathers that stuck up like ears. But Oscar had a problem. The other owls in the woods slept all day and hunted at night. Oscar slept all night and stayed awake all day. Because of this, Oscar was often lonely. His friends did not know how to help him change. They took Oscar to see Olivia, a very wise old owl.

Olivia said, "Have a party one night."

"How is a party going to help Oscar sleep all day?" his friends asked.

Olivia laughed. "When the sun begins to set and Oscar starts to fall asleep, start eating, singing, dancing, and laughing," she said. "No one sleeps through a party! Keep him awake all night. He'll be so tired in the morning that he'll fall asleep like the rest of us."

The next night, as the sun set, Oscar yawned. He found a nice spot on an oak branch to sleep. Suddenly, he heard music. Olivia and her husband, Owen, sang a funny song. Owls from all over flew in. Aunt Opal served a mouse stew. Everyone was hooting and talking and having fun. Soon, Oscar saw a big full moon that lit the black night.

At about midnight, Oscar felt sleepy. Suddenly, the band grew louder and everyone began to dance. "Come on, Oscar!" they yelled. "Start tapping those toes!"

Oscar loved to dance. He danced fast, and he danced slowly. He danced with Omar, and he danced with Opal. He danced until the sun peeked over the hills.

"I've never been so tired," Oscar said as he let his yellow eyes close.

The party worked! From that day on, Oscar slept all day and stayed awake all night.
