Thank you to the kind commuters who helped me on the train between Cambridge and Ely on July 21st. I had been in Cambridge for a university interview and had rushed to the station because there's only one fast train an hour to London King's Cross. I was literally running when I dropped my phone. I picked that up and then jumped on the train just before it left the station. A few minutes later, I read the electronic noticeboard in the train and saw that we were going to King's Lynn, not King's Cross. I realised I was heading to the seaside and not London! I'm not used to travelling on my own. When I saw that my phone was broken too, I started to cry. I think most of the people in the carriage helped me to calm down and explained what I needed to do. A very kind lady let me use her phone to tell my mum what had happened. I changed trains at Ely and caught the next train back to King's Cross from there. I don't have a very good sense of direction for someone who wants to study geography after school, do I? Thank you everyone!

James @James&family00buzz

Thanks to everyone who looked after my son at the London Eye yesterday. We had just visited the nearby London Aquarium and my two boys wanted to see the London Eye before we went home. It was terribly busy and I had my youngest son in a pushchair. Thomas, who is six, wanted to go faster and ran off ahead. I immediately lost sight of him in the crowd. He got to the Eye and then realized he was lost. Apparently, many people stood in a circle around him to keep him safe. The police were there in seconds, and one police officer carried Thomas on his shoulders to watch for me. I reached him about 2 minutes later. By then, a kind street performer — one of those guys who stands still like a statue — had even bought Thomas an ice cream. I was terrified but Thomas was delighted. I am grateful to you all.

Thanks to the man with the grey and green water bottle on the London Underground Piccadilly Line. The weather was so hot and I was feeling faint. You gave me your seat and your water bottle. I think you had red hair but you definitely had rainbow striped socks because I was looking at them for about 10 minutes. I thought I was going to be sick so I left the train at Barons Court station to cool off before getting back on the Underground. I took a little walk to look for a café and found several flats to rent. I'm moving to Barons Court next week! Would you like your water bottle back?
