A world without the internet

Tim Berners-Lee is usually credited with inventing the world wide web in the 1980s, but <sup>1</sup> _____ for many other people, today's internet would not exist. If computer technology <sup>2</sup> _____ advanced rapidly after World War II, we wouldn't have had the infrastructure needed to build the internet. The computer revolution <sup>3</sup> _____ taken place without the work of Alan Turing, who built the first modern computer in the 1940s. And <sup>4</sup> _____ people hadn't used binary code for centuries in smoke signals, Morse code and textile machines – would we have thought of using it to write computer programmes? It's difficult to imagine what the world would be like today if we <sup>5</sup> _____ the internet, because the technology is so interwoven with our daily lives. But <sup>6</sup> _____ the internet suddenly stopped working? Some scientists think this <sup>7</sup> _____ one day – if the energy from a big solar storm hits Earth, it <sup>8</sup> _____ electronic devices worldwide. <sup>9</sup> _____ we protect computer networks better, we <sup>10</sup> _____ one day be in big trouble!
