

L✓4 Check Sound-Alikes

There are many words in English that sound almost the same. These sound-alikes include minimal pairs, numbers, and longer sound-alikes.

Some sound-alikes are separated by only one difference in sound. Words which differ by only one sound are called minimal pairs.

fall	ball
bit	beat
pick	pit

The different sound in a minimal pair can occur at the beginning of a word (as in tall/ball). It can also occur in the middle of a word (as in bit/beat) or at the end of a word (as in pick/pit). Although minimal pairs differ by only one sound, they usually differ a great deal in meaning. If you cannot hear minimal pair sound differences, you will be confused about the meanings of English sentences.

Many English numbers are also sound-alikes.

four	forty	fourteen
-------------	--------------	-----------------

Four has one syllable. Forty and fourteen have two syllables. Forty receives stress on its first syllable. Fourteen receives stress on its second syllable. If you cannot hear these syllable and stress differences, you can be confused about the meanings of English sentences.

first	fourth	fifth
--------------	---------------	--------------

These three numbers all begin with the same sound. If you cannot hear the difference in their endings, you might be confused about the meanings of English sentences.

Longer English phrases also can be sound-alikes.

reception	exception
make a mistake	bake a cake
clearing out the store	cleaning up the floor

The first set of longer sound-alikes above consists of two long words. The second two sets consist of phrases including minimal pairs (bake/make) as well as other similar sounding words and phrases (clearing/cleaning, a cake/mistake and the floor/the store). If you cannot hear the differences in these longer sound-alikes, you might be confused about the meanings of English sentences.

The TOEFL tests your ability to distinguish between sound-alikes. Often the answer that sounds the LEAST like the sentences in a mini-dialogue is the correct answer in TOEFL questions.

MODEL
You will hear: M: What are Jane Smith's children up to these days? W: Her daughter is in Tennessee. Her thirty-year-old son is living with his father. Q: What does the woman say about Jane Smith's son? You will read: (A) Her son, who is thirteen years old, is leaving his father's. (B) Her son, who is thirty years old, stays with his dad. (C) Her thirty-year-old son will go a little farther. (D) Her third son lives with his father. Answer:

▼ Explanation ▲

In this question, several sound-alikes are used. Answer (A) contains the number thirteen, which sounds like thirty. It also contains leaving his father's, which sounds like living with his father. Answer (C) contains farther, which sounds like father. Answer (D) contains third, which sounds like thirty. Answer (B) is the correct answer to the question even though it sounds the least like the spoken sentence.

(C) We filled the safe by the door.
(D) Bill bid us farewell at the entrance.

L✓5 Check Exclamations

One sentence type that is commonly used in spoken English is the exclamation. Exclamations are sentences which express strong emotion, such as pleasure, disbelief, excitement, anticipation, enthusiasm, and displeasure.

An exclamation can occur in the following forms.

1. What (+ adjective) + noun (+ subject + verb)!
What a beautiful day it is!
(It is a very beautiful day.)
What a day!
2. How + adjective/adverb (+ subject + verb)!
How beautiful it is!
(It is really beautiful.)
How beautiful!

Exclamations occurring in these two forms are accompanied by strong stresses.

Another type of exclamation can occur when a regular statement or question is given special stress and intonation.

Is this good?
Is this good!

Both sentences have the same form as a question. However, the second sentence in this pair does not function as a true question. It functions as an exclamation which expresses a strong emotion—pleasure.

I'm looking forward to seeing him.
I'm looking forward to seeing him!

Both sentences have the same form as a statement. However, the second sentence in this pair does not function as only a single statement of fact. It functions as an exclamation which expresses strong emotions—excitement and anticipation.

The TOEFL tests your ability to recognize exclamations.

MODEL
You will hear: M: I bought another car today. W: How could you do that! Q: What does the woman mean?
You will read: (A) How were you able to do that? (B) How often did you do that? (C) You do that very well. (D) That wasn't a wise thing to do.
Answer:

▼ Explanation ▲

In this mini-dialogue, a question form is being used as an exclamation. Answer (A) contains a restatement of the question form, but not of its exclamatory meaning. Answer (B) asks how often rather than how. Answer (C) contains parts of the exclamation, but it also contains very well, which is not part of the meaning of the exclamation. Answer (D) is the correct answer to the question because it is the only answer which restates the exclamatory meaning expressed in the mini-dialogue.

ON THE TOEFL

- Listen carefully for exclamations in TOEFL questions.

EXERCISE 5A: Tape Practice with Exclamations

Listen to each exclamation. Write it on the first blank line. Then write a restatement for each exclamation on the second blank line. Stop the tape after each question to allow yourself extra time to write.

1. How lovely she looks in that dress!
She looks very lovely in that dress.
2. _____

3. _____

4. _____

5. _____

6. _____

EXERCISE 5B: Tape Practice with Questions, Declarative Statements, and Exclamations

Listen to the sentence pairs. At the end of each sentence, write a period (.) if it makes a statement, a question mark (?) if it asks a question, and an exclamation point (!) if it is an exclamation.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1. (A) What do you mean ?
(B) What do you mean ! | 4. (A) What are you doing that for _____
(B) What are you doing that for _____ |

(B) Has this been difficult _____ | 5. (A) I'm tired _____
(B) I'm tired _____ |
| 3. (A) I can't believe he's a thief _____
(B) I can't believe he's a thief _____ | 6. (A) Doesn't this poetry inspire you _____
(B) Doesn't this poetry inspire you _____ |

EXERCISE 5C: More Tape Practice with Questions, Declarative Statements, and Exclamations

Listen to each sentence. At the end of each sentence, write a period (.) if it makes a statement, a question mark (?) if it asks a question, and an exclamation point (!) if it is an exclamation.

- | | |
|--|---------------------------------------|
| 1. We need a new tire ! | 4. Hasn't the seminar been good _____ |
| 2. Have you ever seen this many people before _____ | 5. What could he want _____ |
| 3. Rita could be in France by now _____ | 6. She likes raw fish _____ |

EXERCISE 5D: Tape Practice with Exclamations

Listen carefully to each dialogue and the corresponding question. Circle the letter that best answers the question you hear.

1. (A) She looks very tired.
(B) She needs to change the tire.
(C) She's looking for a tire.
(D) How can she be tired?

(D) The basketball coach finally called.
6. (A) Who built this house?
(B) Is this house well-built?
(C) When was this house built?
(D) This house certainly is well-constructed.

L✓6 Check Question Intonation

Questions in English are normally asked using question forms, in which the subject and the verb of the sentence change places (V+S). Sometimes, however, questions are asked using regular declarative statement forms, in which the subject comes before the verb in the sentence (S+V). When questions are asked using declarative forms, these forms end with a rising, question intonation. This question intonation tells you that what you hear is a question and not a statement.

He wants to go. (a statement telling what he wants to do)

He wants to go? (a question asking what he wants to do)

Another type of question used in English is the tag question. Tag questions are questions added on to statements. Speakers use tag questions to find out information or to seek agreement. Tag questions normally take one of the following two forms.

Affirmative sentence + negative tag
Tom is here, isn't he?

Negative sentence + affirmative tag
Tom isn't here, is he?

Tag questions may be spoken with two different intonation patterns.

Jane lives near here, doesn't she?

It's a beautiful day today, isn't it.

In the first sentence above, a rising question intonation is used because the speaker is questioning whether her or his information or idea is correct.

In the second sentence above, a falling intonation is used because the speaker is expressing an idea with which she or he is almost certain the listener will agree.

The TOEFL tests your ability to hear question intonation.

MODEL

You will hear:

M: I had a nice visit with Martha this morning.

W: You called her? (rising question intonation)

Q: What does the woman mean?

You will read:

- (A) You telephoned Martha.
- (B) You should call Martha.
- (C) Did you call Martha?
- (D) When did Martha call you?

Answer:

▼ Explanation ▲

In this mini-dialogue, a statement form is being used to ask a question. Answer (A) and answer (B) contain statements, not questions. Answer (D) contains a question, but this question is not a restatement of the question asked in the mini-dialogue. Answer (C) is the correct answer to this question because it contains a question which is a restatement of the spoken question.

EXERCISE 6A: Tape Practice with Question Intonation in Statement Form

Listen to each spoken sentence. Write a Q on the line for each sentence that asks a question. Write an S on the line for each sentence that makes a statement.

1. Q
