Part II: READING

Read the article:

MATT DRUDGE

This is Matt Drudge, millionaire founder and owner of the Drudge Report, the first and most successful online "newspaper". People have called Drudge the ultimate blogger but he doesn't accept the description. He considers the Drudge Report to be a real newspaper, very different from the thousands of blogs that have sprung up on the internet.

Drudge's fascination for news and gossip stems from a childhood job delivering papers for The Washington Star. It gave him plenty of time and opportunity to catch up with the latest news. Uninterested in school work or sports, Drudge developed an obsession with rumors and political gossip. In school, his only good subject was Current Affairs. Following a series of dead-end jobs, Drudge ended up in Los Angeles in the 1990's, just in time for the beginning of what was to become the internet.

The early internet was a fertile hunting ground for Drudge. He spent hours sifting through the newsgroups and the websites that existed then, searching for rumors and inside stories from the political and entertainment worlds. He launched the Drudge Repot website in 1995, a daily "rumor" bulletin containing his version of the latest and juiciest gossip from Hollywood and Washington. Always managing to be the first with breaking news, Drudge's success was assured when he became the first person to publicize the Monica Lewinsky scandal in 1998.

Now with revenue of over $ 1 million a year and many thousands of subscribers, the Drudge Report has become a "must read" resource for those hungry for the latest news and gossip. But will the ever-increasing availability of news on the Internet mean the end for its older rival, the conventional newspaper? Drudge doesn't think so. He sees the two working together. As far as news – junkie Drudge is concerned; there can never be too much news.
