

Cognates: Stolen Words

Over 2000 years ago in the Western part of the planet, a group of people called Romans became very powerful. They started in the city of Rome in the country we now call Italy, and conquered more and more and more of the lands around them. They ruled the world from the top of Africa up through England.

The Romans spoke Latin. In this map of the Roman Empire, the country names are written in Latin. What is the Latin word for Italy? _____
What is the Latin word for Germany? _____
What is the Latin word for Spain? _____

When the Romans defeated a country, they moved in and started speaking Latin. Soon the defeated groups started mixing Latin with their languages. However, the farther they were from Rome, the less their languages sounded like Latin. Which language do you think probably sounds most like Latin? _____ Why?

Today, Latin is dead, but many languages still use Latin words. For example, what was the Latin word for Africa? _____ What was the Latin word for Europe? _____ England was one of the last countries to develop its own language. Instead of making up totally new words for everything, they stole words from the languages around them, especially the Latin or Roman(ce) languages, like Spanish and French. Really, though, English stole from everyone: Germans, Mandarin Chinese, Native Americans. In fact, we still steal new words when we need them! Think about "avatar" from Sanskrit and "karaoke" from Japanese.

We call these stolen words COGNATES.

Here's the rule: If 2 words from different languages SOUND almost the same, they are probably cognates.

Are these pairs of words cognates?

Write "cognates" or "not cognates" next to each pair.

English friend/Spanish amigo

English chocolate/Korean chokollit

English music/Russian muzyka

English speak/Ukrainian hovoryty

English acid/Turkish asit

English school/Portuguese escola

English computer/Burmese kwanpyauutar

English helicopter/Arabic hilikubtar

English telephone/Somali telefoonka

English television/Hindi televijan

THREE TYPES of cognates

Most cognates are not spelled the same. They SOUND the same. To decide if two words from different languages are cognates, you must listen to them.

What do you need to do if you want to tell if 2 words are cognates? You need to _____!

These words are cognates with English words. Sort them into the correct categories.

school/Spanish escuela action/Turkish aksyon jungle/Hindi jangal

president/Russian president humor/Ukrainian humor

map/Portuguese mapa line/Burmese line artist/French artiste

sandwich/Korean saendeuwichi captain/Arabic qob'tan

Africa/Somali Afrika coffee/Chinese kafei festival/Haitian festival bread/Marathi breda mango/Kyrgyz mango

Spelled the Same	Spelled Slightly Different	Spelled Very Different