Part 1: Read the passage and choose the best answers for each question.

Everybody has at least one shirt on his wardrobe. Some have more. They are commonly worn for every day purposes and in particular when you want to dress up. But not many people know that the shirt is one of our oldest garments.

Since before the Middle Ages, the shirt has existed as a piece of clothing, but then only as underwear for men or as a night gown. In the early days, the shirt had neither collar nor cuffs, but a hem that could be tightened and buttoned. And you always put it on by pulling it over your head. In the Middle Ages, one could choose between fixed or detachable collar. The garment was often made out of linen or sometimes silk. In the 18th century, the shirt was no longer worn only as underwear, the collar grew into enormous proportion and was decorated with embroidery and lace. Later, the collar grew back to smaller sizes again.

At the end of the World War I, the shirt went through a major transformation. It was only at that time the modern shirt with buttons all along the front became popular, even if the first buttoned shirt was registered by Brown, Davies & Co as early as 1871. In the 1930s, the shirt with the fixed collar revived and it has been with us ever since. Twenty years later the nylon shirt was introduced and during the same period of time the more daring short sleeve shirt became high fashion. In the 1960s, the chest pocket was introduced as a consequence of the vest under the suit jacket becoming more and more uncommon.
