Demographic Trends in the European Union

Government statistics show that the population in the European Union is growing slowly but going through significant change. The European Commission predicts that by 2060, the population will be about 9.7 million. Both men and women are living longer and longer. In 2060, life expectancy for men in the EU will be 85, and for women, it will be 89. This rising life expectancy means that a larger and larger percentage of the population will be old. Only 5% of the population was over 80 in 2013, but the figure is projected to rise to over 11% by 2060. This shift means that the overall cost of health care, especially long-term health care, is likely to get higher and higher.

The age of women giving birth for the first time is also rising in the European Union. Residents of the EU are waiting longer and longer to have children. In 2015, the age of first-time mothers reached its highest point ever—almost 29—with the youngest first-time mothers in Bulgaria and the oldest in Italy. In Italy and Spain, more than 5% of these first births were to mothers over 40. In most European countries, women's age at the birth of their first child has climbed about five years since 1950.

Postponing the first birth means that there is less time to have large families, and indeed, fewer and fewer children are being born in EU countries. Finally, more and more women and couples are simply choosing not to have children. Once referred to as "childlessness," today many people consider this a lifestyle choice, calling themselves "childfree." More than 25% of EU households consist of couples without children.

The longer these trends continue, the more slowly the population will grow. This demographic shift is creating many challenges for governments across the EU. As the population ages, there are fewer taxpayers to support people who are sick, have a disability, and are retired. Governments and population experts are studying these issues, but they have no ready answers or easy solutions.

Writing

What are three ways in which your own childhood was different from that of either your mother or father? Write two paragraphs that compare the differences between your childhood and that of one of your parents. Include repeated and double comparatives in your sentences as well as the proper connectors.

Speaking:

Topic 1

These days, as a result of people living longer and couples having children later, many people are finding themselves in the difficult situation of caring for both their children and their aging parents. Do you think it's better to have three generations living together or each generation living independently? Would either option make caring for one of the generations easier? Speak for two to three minutes using the grammar and the vocab of the unit.

What are the pros of each option?

What are the cons of each option?

Topic 2

Make up a conversation between you and a real or imagined sibling. Talk about a time when you think your parents were either too strict or too lenient with you. Consider the following questions as you plan your conversation. Speak for two to three minutes using the grammar and the vocab of the unit.

Did you think your parents were being fair at the time?

Have you changed your mind since then?
