The European Environment Agency (EEA) estimates that poor air quality contributes to 432,000 premature deaths in Europe each year. The most significant pollutant identified by the EEA was particulate matter, which mainly arises in Ireland from traffic emissions and the burning of smoky fuels for home heating. As regards Ireland, the EEA reported that 1,200 premature deaths every year can be attributed to particulate matter exposure.

The response required here is clear: policymakers, legislators and regulators need to ensure that the safest fuel and transport options are favoured and promoted to assist people in making healthier decisions. In parallel, individuals need to consider how their behaviours impact on our environment, and therefore contribute to health problems such as respiratory and heart disease in our own communities.

In 2013, the Government published the Healthy Ireland framework, which aims to bring about changes to make Ireland a place where everyone has the opportunity to live a healthful life. The inclusion of “wellbeing” in the national discussion on health marks a welcome development, as it moves our ambition beyond “disease prevention” and embraces a fuller vision of people who are living well and have a general sense of satisfaction.

Most of us are very used to the sounds we hear in everyday life. Loud music, the television, people (19) _____ on their phone, the traffic and even pets barking in the middle of the night. All of these have become a part of the (20) _____ culture and rarely disturb us. However, when the sound of the television keeps you from sleeping all night or the traffic starts to give you a headache, it stops becoming just noise and start (21) _____ into noise pollution. For many of us, the concept of pollution is limited to nature and resources. However, noise that tends to disrupt the natural rhythm of life makes for one solid pollutant.

By definition, noise pollution (22) _____ place when there is either excessive amount of noise or an unpleasant sound that causes temporary disruption in the natural balance. This definition is usually (23) _____ to sounds or noises that are unnatural in either their volume or their production. Our environment is such that it has become difficult to escape noise. Even electrical appliances at home have a constant hum or beeping sound. By and large, lack of urban planning increases the exposure to (24) _____ sounds. This is why understanding noise pollution is necessary to curb it in time.
