From all places I have ever lived in, Maracay city is one of those I know will be unforgettable. I feel unleashed while I live here.

Not only I had the chance to live in Caracas city, but also I've rented in other regions and cities, since I consider myself a bit nomad.

However, here I experience peace, merged with some minor fears that don't blur the optimism and joy.

Even though Maracay city was considered in 2014 the most dangerous city in the whole territory, today it seems everything is "under control".

Of course, you must be aware, but as long as you have your security standards defined, it rarely happens anything sad.

As soon as I moved here, I loved the weather. It's mild and, sometimes, cold and mist. Therefore, you should get a jacket in your backpack in case it rains.

Although the weather is nice, during the first months of the year, the sun is tough, so people are tanned. After thinking a lot about it, I decided to stay.

People here are a bit more friendly than Caracas', who I can't stand. Unless, of course, they're my friends, who I really love.

I moved here so that I could find my passport quickly, and I know more places wait for me in the future. Besides, Maracay city is prettier and greener. Instead, Caracas is more crowded.
