

Margaret Atwood's novel describes how an epidemic (The Waterless Flood) has attacked the human race and killed millions of people.	A 'blade runner' police officer fights a crime wave in a mega-city of the future. The film continues the story of the original 1982 film.	In this 2014 film, there is very little food on Earth as a result of climate change . Twelve volunteers travel through space and time to find a new place for humans to live. They finally reach safety on a space station near Saturn.	This computer game takes place in Night City, California. Robots work to control the city's pollution while humans compete for control of the city.
In this popular game, a nuclear accident and a war has affected the world's water. Players create characters to help the hero, the Vault Dweller, bring clean water to an underground city in Southern California.	This film, the first of the Matrix franchise, describes a world where artificial intelligence (AI) machines control the Earth. Humans live in a virtual world but use time travel to fight for their freedom.	This cult TV series is set after a nuclear catastrophe . Space travel allows thousands of survivors to live on a space station. However, overpopulation means that 100 young people must return to Earth to find somewhere new to live.
