

The ups and downs of flying

1

I actually love _____ to the airport, driving to the airport, because it's usually that moment when you're getting away from work, and it's just a pleasant thing to do. And I don't mind _____. It doesn't bother me. I know a lot of people get very nervous, and of course it's much better when it's a well-done landing, but it doesn't bother me.

2

I really don't like _____. It's very rare that you don't have to stand in a long queue, and that there don't seem to be any complications. And I really don't like embarking when you haven't got a seat number - going into the _____ and putting up with people pushing around and trying to get to their seat, and not being able to sit with whoever you're travelling with so, no, I much prefer companies that give you seats.

I don't mind _____. If there isn't a long queue, but I hate it when it happens in places like London. Some of the London airports have several hundred people in the queue, and even though they go quite fast, I really dislike that.

I quite like _____. I've always loved the feeling of leaving the land down there and then just rising in the air suddenly. I really love it.

But I hate the _____. This is something that has happened a lot to me, as well as missing connections, and being in the airport all day. I really hate that.

I don't mind waiting to _____. You usually have places to look around, or I take a book and read, and it doesn't bother me too much. I prefer _____. I love having a window seat when you can see a new place, some place that you haven't seen before. But if it's a place I've seen before, and it doesn't have anything special in it, I like an aisle seat so I can get up. I hate _____. It's one of the things that often takes too _____.
