Chinese food is delicious. They eat a lot of rice, noodles, vegetables, and meat. They fry or steam a lot of food, it's very healthy.

In China, people don't usually eat knives and forks. Instead, they use chopsticks and sometimes use spoons. They usually eat from big serving dishes. They put them in the middle of the table, but they sometimes serve portions of rice in small bowls. In China, they don't think it's rude to reach across the table to take food from serving dishes. They do think it is rude to take the last piece of food from a serving dish for yourself. They offer it to another person instead. That is very polite. When your bowl is empty, someone gives you more food. When you are full, you put your hand over your bowl or leave some food in your bowl. They don't put chopsticks on top of their bowls. They put them on the table next to them when they finish eating. They don't use napkins, but they usually clean their hands with hot towels at the end of the meal.
