It's In Our Hands

The United Nations has recently announced that we need to reduce our carbon emissions to zero by the end of the 21st century. They have warned that, 1) to avoid devastating consequences, we must take immediate action to decrease harmful greenhouse gases. If we fail to do so, global temperatures will soon reach dangerous levels and 2) the year 2100, the planet will experience irreversible climatic changes. These predicted changes include longer heatwaves, higher sea levels and more frequent natural disasters. We will also see more coastal flooding, inland drought and air pollution, and when delicate ecosystems 3) , many species of wildlife will become extinct. This will all lead to social and economic problems too; famine, poverty and violent political conflict over resources. Thankfully, though, it 4) be this way. Given that global warming is mainly affected by human activity, saving the planet is within our power. If world governments, together with the public, treat the planet with the respect it demands, we will no 5) be rewarded.
