8- Read the text about work and choose the correct answer.

Are you happy in your job?

Unhappy workers and problems such as stress can cost businesses a lot of money. Last year, in Britain there were around 14 million lost work days. So how can businesses keep their workers happy? Good managers are very important.

Positive feedback: Good managers give workers positive feedback. They don't always make negative comments.

Extra benefits: As well as positive comments, you can give workers extra benefits for good work. Not just money, but an extra day off or an early finish maybe.

Workers in control: Workers are happy when they can make decisions about their own job. A good boss doesn't make all the decisions.

Flexible working: In good businesses, workers can change their working hours. Perhaps, they can work from home some days.

Good communication: A good manager communicates well with his staff. He knows when someone is unhappy and he tries to help before the problem gets worse.
