Many, or even most, teenagers get acne: a combination of pimples and blackheads that can be mild, (34) _____, or severe. Although most acne is mild and will get better over time, treatment is sometimes necessary for severe cases. Conventional medicine and traditional Chinese medicine (TCM) are both used all over the world, but offer somewhat different views of acne causes and treatments. Dermatologists often (35) _____ lotions and face washes to clean the skin because bacteria can cause acne. In some cases, they might also prescribe antibiotics and other medications (36) _____ work inside the body to fight the bacteria that cause acne.

Unlike conventional medicine, TCM teaches that there are actually two types of acne, one caused by too much heat in the body, and the (37) _____ caused by poor circulation of the blood. Depending on which kind of acne a patient has, the treatment might be a change in diet, acupuncture, or face washes - but unlike those in conventional medicine, TCM face washes are usually made with herbs or flowers.

There is no scientific evidence what actually causes acne. (38) _____, everyone still agrees that it's a good idea to keep skin clean and that stress might make acne worse.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the answer to each of the question.

Women often complain that the men in their lives are not romantic enough. But men sometimes have trouble expressing their feelings, often resorting to cheesy Hallmark cards or pricey bejeweled baubles to do the job for them. But there is a far better way to be romantic and it doesn't involve spending a fortune or even opening your mouth.

In the days before courting consisted of hanging out and getting drinks, courting was a formal and dignified endeavor. Symbols were used to express feelings and thoughts deemed too special for mere words. During the Victorian Era, a whole romantic language developed around the giving and receiving of flowers. Everything from the type and size of the flower to the way it was held or presented conveyed layers of meaning and communicated a gentleman's feelings and intentions. Each bouquet contained a secret message for a lady to eagerly interpret and endlessly dissect.

These days giving flowers has become a somewhat ho-hum cliché. Resurrecting this Victorian tradition will infuse the gesture with new life and romance and bring back some of the subtly, mystery, and fun of courtship. Your lady will swoon that you put far more thought into your selection of flowers than grabbing a bouquet out of the case at Wal-Mart. You'll come off as a real gentleman and a hopeless romantic. It can become an amazing tradition you'll both enjoy. Seriously, women eat this stuff up.

Of course, even women nowadays have forgotten the meanings of flowers. So buy your lady a flower dictionary. And keep a copy for yourself (it's important that you both use the same reference, as the meanings were never set in stone and can sometimes vary from book to book). Then, each time you present her with a bouquet, she can search the volume to find what secret messages you have embedded in the flowers.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the answer to each of the question.

Losing the ability to smell strong odours such as onions, petrol or lemons in later life could be one of the warning signs that an early death is approaching, a new study suggests. Researchers tested the smelling ability of 2,300 participants aged between 71 and 82 then followed them up for more than 10 years. During that period around half of them died, but the risk of dying within 10 years rose by 46 percent for those who struggle to smell.

It is known that losing the ability to smell often goes hand-in-hand with diseases like Parkinson's and Alzheimer's as these conditions kill off olfactory nerves needed to sense odours. However the study found that such diseases accounted for fewer than one third of cases, and seven in 10 of the bad smellers had appeared healthy before their deaths. "We don't have a reason for more than 70 per cent of the increased risk. We need to find out what happened to these individuals," said Honglei Chen, an epidemiologist, of Michigan State University. "The findings of this study tell us that in older adults, loss of sense of smell has broader implications for health beyond what we have already known. Incorporating a sense of smell test in routine doctor visits might be a good idea at some point."

Those involved in the study were asked to take part in the The Brief Smell Identification Test (BSIT), where 12 odours are released by scratching scent strips with a pencil. Smells included petrol, rose and soap which are chosen because they are distinctive and familiar in most cultures. Commenting on the study experts said it was important for older people to let doctors know if their sense of smell begins to diminish as it could be a herald of unseen problems.

Prof Robert Howard, Professor of Old Age Psychiatry at University College London (UCL), said: "We have known for many years that loss of sense of smell in later life may precede other symptoms of neurodegenerative disorders such as Parkinson's or Alzheimer's by many years. The study showed that the risk of dying in the next 10 years was increased by about a half in people who have difficulty smelling and that only some of this risk could be explained by the development of Parkinson's or Alzheimer's. This raises the interesting possibility that impaired sense of smell may be a marker of ageing and this fact should be taken seriously by older people and their doctors."
