Justus Uwayesu

Justus Uwayesu is a person I really admire. He's from a poor farming family in Rwanda and in my opinion, he's an amazing young man.

Justus' parents died during a terrible war in Rwanda. Justus was only three years old at the time. Red Cross workers rescued him and looked after him for some time, but by the age of nine, he was living in a rubbish dump. One day, an American charity worker visited the dump. The other children at the dump ran away, but Justus stayed. He told the worker he wanted to get an education. The worker helped Justus, and Justus went to primary school and then secondary school. He succeeded at school, and he has recently started studying at Harvard University, one of the best universities in the world.

I want to meet Justus one day. I think he's really inspiring. He has had a very difficult life, but he's never given up.
