21st century teachers need to serve as a guide or mentor for their students, not as the all-knowing sage providing them with everything they need. Nowadays, with so much access (21) _____ resources of all kinds, children invariably know more than teachers on different topics, step ahead of the technology. Teachers need to be empowered as facilitators for learning so that they can empower their students in turn. This shift is great news for teachers. Instead of struggling to give kids all the (22) _____ in areas that they know little about, teachers can support students as they make their own steps into different fields. It's about preparing them to go beyond their seniors, ensuring they have the skills to do it, and assisting them along the way.

(23) _____, teachers need to be forward-thinking, curious, and flexible. They must be learners: learning new teaching methods and learning alongside their students. Simply asking (24) _____ like "What will my students need dozens of years from now?" or "How can I help give them those skills?" can change teachers' mindset make them a leader, and bring about changes in the classroom, school and community.

Completing a marathon is considered very difficult, but many coaches believe that it is possible for anyone who is willing to put in the time and effort. Obviously, most participants do not run a marathon to win. More important for most runners is their personal finish time and their placement within their specific age group and gender. Another very important goal is to break certain time barriers. For example, ambitious recreational first-timers often try to run the marathon under 4 hours more competitive runners will attempt to run under 3 hours. Many runners then prefer to finish for example in 3:29:59, which makes them "sub' 3:30h marathoners", instead of 3:30:01.

For most runners, the marathon is the longest run they have ever attempted. Many coaches believe that the most important element in marathon training is the long run. Recreational runners commonly try to reach a maximum of about 20 miles in their longest weekly run and about 40 miles a week in total when training for the marathon. More experienced marathoners may run a longer distance. During marathon training, adequate recovery time is crucial. If fatigue or pain is felt, it is recommended to take a break for a couple of days or more to let the body heal. Overtraining is a condition that results from not getting enough rest to allow the body to recover from difficult training. It can actually result in a lower endurance and speed and place a runner at a greater risk of injury.
