

Exercise 9

Find and correct the 10 grammatical errors in the essay. There are errors with articles (the, a, an), referencing words (it, this, that, etc.), prepositions (in, on, at, etc.), relative pronouns (who, which, where, etc.) and verb and noun forms.

The chart shows a percentage of people, divided into different groups between 14 and 80 and over, which read traditional newspapers in a country in Europe.

The most noticeable feature of the chart are the number of people aged 80 and over who still read printed news publications, comparison to those in other age groups. In addition, a quarter of people who read newspapers offline are age between 60 and 79. Interestingly, the same proportion of paper-based news publications is read by these in their twenties and thirties and those in their forties and fifties. What is also evidence is that only 5% of newspaper readership in print format is made on of the youngest age group shown in the chart.

In summary, it can be say that the older generations prefer to get their news from print publications whilst the under-19s had, for the most part, abandoned traditional newspapers for other media formats.
