Text 1.

March 10th, 2036

It's almost 7.20 pm as 14-year-old Sally stops dictating the last sentence of her essay directly onto the word processing software and tells her computer to find and correct any mistakes in her home assignment. A moment later, she walks downstairs to the living room. 'TV on.' As she says that, a large screen comes to life on the wall. The built-in cameras identify her immediately and a large message that reads 'Welcome Sally' appears on the screen. 'Channel 54', she says. 'Sorry, content unsuitable. Access denied', reads the message on the screen. 'That's a shame', thinks Sally as she realises that her dad must have found out she's been watching the crime mystery channel and has set up a parental lock on it. She quickly tells the TV to tune in to some of her other favourite channels and is relieved to find that none of the others has been blocked yet. The TV now displays the startup screen based on Sally's watching history. At the top of the screen come the talent shows she absolutely adores. Beneath them is a short list of TV series, documentaries and animal programmes. The bottom of the screen shows several recommendations for feature films. Sally chooses one of them and instructs the TV to display the plot summary and viewers' comments. A bit disappointed, she is just about to turn the TV off when a flashing message appears on the screen: 'Incoming call. Do you accept?' It is her friend, Dean. He tells her he wants to upload a video clip to her home cloud-based digital library. He explains that the film is part of his Culture Studies project and asks Sally to watch it and say what she thinks of it. A moment later Sally accepts the file transfer and starts watching the video. Just like the other videos recorded by Dean, this one also features excellent image and sound quality. But instead of his usual light-hearted and witty comments, the scenes are accompanied by moving and serious remarks that show a different side of Dean that she hasn't known before. As soon as 'THE END' appears on the screen, she calls him back.

1 As soon as she turns on the TV, Sally is disappointed because

- A she has no access to some of her favourite channels.
- B the film she checks on is below her expectations.
- C her dad has prevented her from watching the crime mystery channel.
- D her watching history has been deleted from the TV memory.

2 Which statement describes the startup screen?

- A It shows the same types of programmes for each user.
- B It shows links to the programmes that were watched recently.
- C It mostly shows interactive ads for feature films.
- D It show TV programmes based on individual viewing preferences.

3 What surprises Sally about Dean's video clip?

- A Dean's unique sense of humour.
- B The selection of scenes for his video.
- C The superb picture and sound quality.
- D The emotional nature of his comments.

TELEVISION OF THE FUTURE

With the growing popularity of the Web, it has been predicted by many that the old tellies in the living room are bound to disappear at some point. So, is there a future for television in the tablet and smartphone era? Several current trends already show that these predictions are unlikely to come true.

- Studies have shown that TV is still the dominant medium and viewers of online channels or mobile TV are still in the minority. Some experts believe that the reason for that is that the collective viewing experience is still very important, as families and friends like to sit down together to watch big sporting events or a popular TV series.
- As a result of the manufacturers' efforts to provide consumers with superb image and sound quality, the TV set is becoming an even more important source of entertainment. In the opinion of a large number of experts, the advantage of a big screen with high definition image quality cannot be equalled by the convenience offered by mobile devices.
- It is a widely accepted concept among TV manufacturers that most viewers expect new TV models to be equipped with more and more features that allow them to function like computers – USB ports, a wi-fi connection, web browsers and hard disks. These features are crucial so that viewers can browse freely through the mass of programmes available for viewing and share personal content with others.

4 Which of the following is mentioned in the text as an opinion, not a fact?

- A More people watch traditional TV than mobile TV.
 B Convenience is less important than picture quality.
 C People enjoy watching TV in the company of others.
 D People require computer-like features in modern TV sets.

5 From both texts, we learn that

- A TV sets will allow users to communicate with other people.
 B TV sets will display startup screens for individual users.
 C 3-D television will provide excellent quality of image and sound.
 D TV sets will be voice-operated.
