

Pros and cons of working at home

Firstly, people who work in their living room may suffer from poor health.

It is time-saving for employees to work at home. Instead of spending hours getting to and from work, people just take a few steps to their working table.

Finally, it damages the ability of face-to-face communication if people do all their work at home.

With the saved time, they could do a better job or have a better rest.

Advocates of working at home believe that individuals benefit a lot from it.

They are more likely to be attacked by obesity or hypertension, as they spend the whole day without any outdoor activities.

However, I am of the opinion that this unconventional way of working causes more problems.

In addition, working at home allows people to work in their own way.

When they have got used to sending e-mails or having a camera meeting, it is difficult for them to communicate with others in real life.

This is because people are easily distracted and disturbed by many things, such as snacks, gadgets and visitors.

Secondly, there may be extremely low working efficiency.

For example, there is no need for them to wear suits which are not a comfortable choice for the majority of people.
