Once upon a time, a King had three lovable daughters. He loved them so much that he gave them all the precious things in life. One day, the King wanted to know how much they loved him. He asked each of the princesses the same question: "How much do you love me?" The two elder daughters boasted about loving their father as they loved the castle, diamonds and other valuable things. The little princess replied: "I need you as much as I need salt in my life." The King got angry and drove her out of the citadel. Some years later, the two elder princesses got married to princes of other lands and never visited their father. The King had no one close to talk to and felt so lonely in his castle. Then one day, he received an invitation requesting his presence at a royal wedding. At the reception on the big day, all the honored guests were served with bland dishes. It seemed the cook had left salt out of all the food. The King broke into tears and said, "My little dear, now I know what your reply means. We all need salt in our life." Just as he finished saying these words, the bride appeared in front of him and hugged him. To his surprise, it was his driven-away little princess!
