Read the following passage and choose the best answer to each question. (5 questions)

Working part-time is common among students. However, only a small number of them are lucky enough to find jobs related to their fields of study, whereas others have to do something totally irrelevant. For example, an engineering student may find work in the retail or hospitality industry, the two fields that have most working students. Although doing part-time jobs is considered as a way to earn some money, you can learn various valuable skills. The customer service skills you learn as a waiter help you interact with colleagues and partners effectively. You can easily deal with people of different personalities. Besides, part-time jobs give you job interview skills. You won't be too nervous when attending an interview for your dream job. What is more, whatever field your part-time job is, you can learn precious cultural lessons. You will be aware of cultural differences and able to adapt to different working environments. Last but not least, each part-time job boosts your confidence. Unfamiliar situations in any part-time job push you out of your comfort zone and you will gradually find yourself capable of doing anything.
