THE RISE OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE

From 27BC to 300 AD, the city of Rome was the capital of the Roman Empire. The Roman Empire was one of the most successful and fascinating in history. But how did this great empire begin? The Roman people had a legend about how their city started.

The story is about twin brothers Romulus and Remus who were the sons of Mars, the Roman god of war. As babies, their evil uncle dropped them into the River Tiber. Fortunately, a female wolf rescued the children and carried them to a local shepherd's house where the shepherd's wife raised the boys as her own.

Romulus and Remus developed into great men. As young men, Romulus and Remus were both skilled warriors and strong leaders. One day, their father, Mars, asked them to build a great city where the wolf rescued them. The brothers worked very hard for a number of years. Together, they started their own army, farmed the lands and constructed many beautiful buildings. After that, the only thing to do was to give the city a name.

Each proud of their efforts, both Romulus and Remus wanted the name the city after themselves. After arguing about it, they were unable to agree on a name so the brothers decided to have a public sword fight. After killing his brother Remus, Romulus named the city 'Rome' in his own honour and became its first king.
