The following text is for questions 11 to 13.

Early Sunday morning, my friends and I went to an institution for disabled children. The building is quite large and very shady.

On our arrival, a security officer welcomed us politely and asked us about our intention. Then, a boy sitting in a wheelchair approached and greeted us politely. He is disabled, but his sharp eyes show high spirits of life. He introduced himself and offered to accompany us to the head office. The security officer agreed and told me that Haris, the boy, would lead us to the head office. Along the way, we had a chitchat. Haris told us that he felt so happy staying there, and for him, all the people in the institution were his big family.

A few moments later, we arrived at the head office. A well-built man welcomed us. We chitchatted for a while, and then he accompanied us walking around the building. We saw how enthusiastic the disabled children did their activities. Many of them were having gyms, and few others were making handicrafts. We interviewed them and were enchanted by their optimism.

The following dialog is for questions 20 to 22.

Reina : You just tasted both of the fruits a bit. What do you think?

Desta : Delicious, but this is more delicious than the other.

Reina : Look at these two fruits closely. Do you think they are similar?

Desta : I think so, though they have different flesh colors. This fruit's flesh is light yellow, and that one is orange.

Reina : Let me tell you. Both are different fruits. The fruit with light yellow flesh is a durian, while the one with orange flesh is called lai, a fruit from Kalimantan. Lai fruit is believed as the natural cross between wild fruit and common durians.

Desta : I see. I thought it was also a durian since it has spikes on its skin. The flesh is thick, soft, and smooth as well.

Reina : Lai fruit indeed has spikes on its skin, but it can be easily split open by hand.

Desta : You're right. Further, the aroma is a bit different, I think.

Reina : It is. Lai fruit doesn't have a pungent aroma that is associated with durians. Instead, it has a faint, rose-like scent.

Desta : I agree.

The following text is for numbers 3 to 5.

Don't know an alligator, or gator, from a crocodile? You're probably not alone. Although these large reptiles belong to different families, they share many similarities, including long snouts, powerful tails, short legs, and bony-plated backs.

However, there are few easy ways to tell them apart. The first is the shape of the snout. Alligators have broad and U-shaped snouts, while crocodiles' are narrow and V-shaped. Next are the teeth. In the case of alligators, the lower teeth are typically not visible when the mouth is shut. In crocodiles, however, some teeth in the bottom jaw appear, most notably the large fourth tooth. Another difference is color. Gray or black? It's probably an alligator. Olive or tan? A crocodile. The two reptiles also differ in location. Crocodiles are usually found in saltwater habitats, while alligators prefer freshwater areas. And last—but not least—is behavior. Crocodiles are typically more aggressive than gators.
