One morning, an arrogant fox was chasing a hare. However, he got caught in a trap. Actually, it was his tail that got trapped. He pulled and pulled but couldn't get free. The tail stayed in the trap.

The fox was very proud of his bushy tail, which he always kept in a good condition. So he avoided pulling too hard to avoid cutting his tail.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

Suddenly the trapper were coming to claim their victim. The fox made one great effort to free his tail. A searing pain followed and then je was free. He ran withaout looking back even once.

Only then did he realise the truth. His tail was missing. Most of it at any rate. The bushiest, glossiest part of it.

The fox felt depressed. Then he felt ashamed. What would he tell the other foxes? Oh, the misery of it! Then, he thought that he would persuade them thet being tsailles was a good thing.

That evening, at the foxes meeting nby the riverside, everyone seemed astonished as the tailless one proceededto lecture everyone that moving around whithout a tail was good.

"Friends, being tailless is so much more fun," he exclaimed and twirled once for effect. "And advantageeous. Look at the weight of it. Think how heavy our tails get after a swim. That's why i got rid of it. It's soooo useless. Now I feel free. Really, all of you shuold cut your tail too," he added

"Shut up, will you!" growled another fox. "we know you lost your tail in the trap. I had seen you flee from the hunters. And I've brought along a memnto." Saying so he dangled the cut tail in front of everyone. The assembly howled with laughter as the tailless fox slunk away.
