The arguments about climate change

According to all the measurements, climate change a happens / is happening, but science b appears / is appearing to be split on what to do about it. Unfortunately, scientists c do not all agree / are not all agreeing about the causes of global warming. In a recent book, two scientists – Fred Singer, a climate physicist, and Dennis Avery, a biologist – d argue / are arguing that the warming currently observed around the world is part of a 1,500-year cycle in solar energy. Singer, an outspoken critic of the idea that humans e warm / are warming the planet, and Avery, f believe / are believing that a well-established, 1,500-year cycle in the Earth's climate can explain most of the global warming that g takes place / has taken place in the last 100 years. We are currently on an upswing, getting warmer after the Little Ice Age, but in a few hundred years h will be / are back on the downswing, and getting colder again. They i say / are saying that efforts to slow down the current warming by reducing emissions of greenhouse gases are at best pointless, or at worst economically damaging. This, of course, is not what the fourth assessment report of the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) j has said / said a few weeks ago. That report from the UN climate science working group k has concluded / concluded that it l is / has been likely that rising greenhouse gas concentrations m have caused / caused most recent warming and that, depending on our actions now to slow the growth of emissions, warming by 2100 n will probably be / is probably between about 1.5°C and 6°C. So, which scientists o tell / are telling us the truth?
