Next class: EXAM

Jake: What do you remember about your school days, Grandpa?
Man: Well, now. They were the best days of my life. Aren't they the best days of your life?
Jake: Oh, no! I hate school! Who was your favourite teacher?
Man: Oh, that's easy. Mr Graves. He was our English teacher. I hated maths and science, but I loved English.
Jake: Were you good at it?
Man: Mr Graves thought I was very good. He wanted me to be a teacher but I really wanted to be a policeman.
Jake: Why?
Man: Well, I left school when I was only twelve because my family was very poor and didn't have enough money for me to stay at school.
Jake: So what did you do?
Man: I got a job at the market. I carried heavy boxes full of vegetables.
Jake: But you didn't do that all your life?
Man: No, I didn't. A few years later, I got my own market shop. I really enjoyed the market life. It was fun and I made a lot of money from my shop. Then, one day a man came over to me in the market and said he wanted me to be in a film. I was so excited. The man paid me a lot of money and that's how I became an actor.
Jake: And now you are a policeman in a television programme!
