Read the passage carefully.

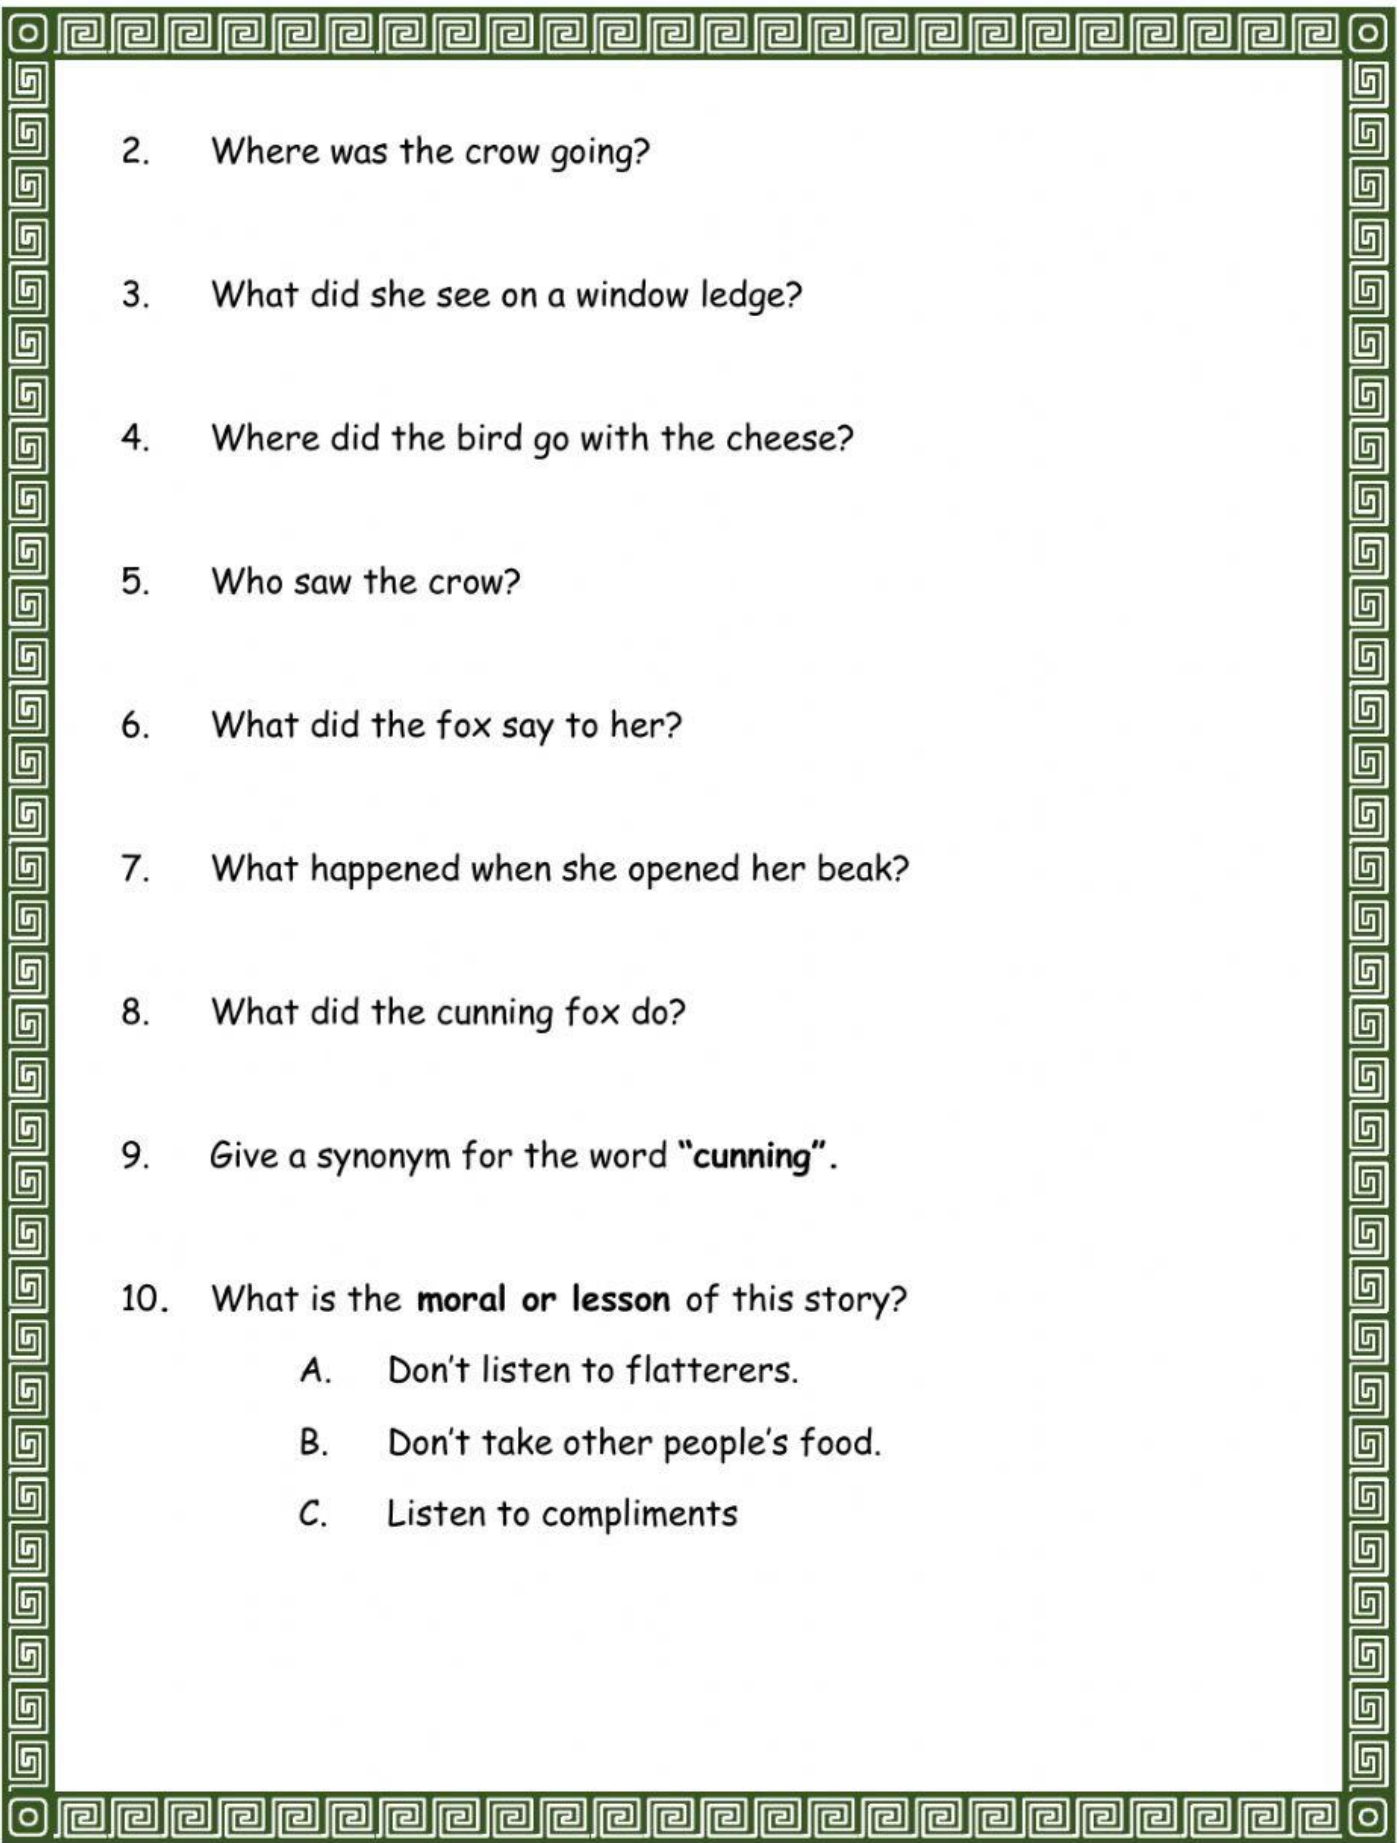

One day a crow was flying to her nest. She saw a bit of cheese on the window ledge. The bird flew down and sat on a fence. She waited until no one was about. Then she flew with the cheese to a tree. A hungry fox saw the crow. He wondered how he could get hold of the cheese. Then the animal had a clever idea.

"Hello, Mrs. Crow!" he called. "How are you?" The crow just nodded her head. "How pretty you look!" cried the fox. The bird was pleased but said nothing. "You must be a lovely singer!" said the fox.

The foolish bird was so flattered that she tried to sing. As soon as she opened her beak, the cheese fell to the ground. At once the cunning fox snapped up the cheese and ran off with it. The stupid crow learned a lesson.
