Summer: Time for a holiday!

It's that time of year again. Time to chose a holiday. Here at Guys and Gals we wanted to find holidays which would suit British teenagers and their families, so we interviewed some young people to ask their opinions about the best holidays.

A We started with Poppy, who had a lot to say. 'I think it's really difficult to go on holiday with your parents when you're a teenager. You know, mums and dads want to do different things than their kids. They want a quiet time, sitting round a pool and eating and sleeping a lot. Well, that's just boring. Having said that, we went on a really cool holiday last year. We stayed at International Forests, a centre in Norfolk not too far from here, which has something for everybody to do. We stayed in a self-catering flat but there were lots of restaurants in the centre with every kind of food you could want. We went to one of them whenever my parents didn't want to cook. The flat was cool, there was satellite TV and we all had our own bedrooms. In the end, the holiday turned out to be quite nice for everyone.'

B Nick had less to say. 'Since I've become a teenager, I've never been on a holiday with my parents that I liked, so I can only tell you what's not a good holiday.

Last year we went to the Canary Islands and we stayed in a hotel. The hotel was quite far from the nearest town and the beach was a good half an hour's walk too. It was too hot to go there in the daytime, so you really had to stay at the hotel all the time. That was boring. All the parents read books around the pool and there were no kids my age, so I stayed in our room a lot of the time. I was so bored I thought I'd die. To all teenagers, I'd say try not to go to a hotel in a hot country with your parents. Ask them to take you to a place that's more exciting.'

C Sasha wasn't sure. 'When I was younger any holiday was great, but last year I didn't have such a good time. My family always goes camping and we've stayed in many different places over the years. Anyway last year we went abroad, and I think that was the mistake. We went to a beautiful place in Poland and the rest of the family really liked it. The problem was me. I think I'm getting to the age where I need teenage company when I'm on holiday. I'm an only child and Mum and Dad are a bit boring for me now. That's why I wasn't so keen on camping abroad - I didn't meet any young people who could speak English. So although the teenagers there were friendly - they smiled a lot - I didn't have anyone to talk to. However, I did like Poland and the camp was very well organised. Probably the best solution is to take a friend with you when you go on holiday.'

D Ted wasn't disappointed with his holiday. 'My parents let me search the internet to find information about holiday places we all would enjoy. I found a number of cool places, and we finally decided on a resort called Island Paradise. It's built on a small island in the Mediterranean, where the weather is usually nice in the summer. It's huge - it's really like a small city - and since it's designed for families, it has lots of things to choose from. The reason I liked the place so much was because there was so much to do. There was a really big indoor tropical pool - with a wave machine and rapids - that was great. Then you could do loads of different sports. In the week we were there, I did bungee jumping, horse-riding, and played golf and tennis. Oh, and the great thing is that no cars are allowed inside the resort, so you go everywhere on foot or by bike. I'd really recommend it to everyone.'
