Binge-watching

In 2013, Netflix did something no other media company had done before: instead of showing only one episode of a series each week, they released the complete season – all ¹ _____. This allowed viewers to be ² _____ of what, when, and how much TV they wanted to watch, which meant they could sit through a whole season of their favorite show for hours and hours. Interestingly, according to a recent survey, though, it seems that typical “viewing marathons” consist, ³ _____, of four episodes. Still, that can be defined as binge-watching, ⁴ _____.
