As computer use becomes more common, the need for security is more important than ever. One of the greatest security threats in the online world is computer hacking.

Computer hacking is the unauthorized access to a computer or network of computers. Hackers are people who illegally enter systems. They may alter or delete information, steal private information, or spread viruses that can damage or destroy files. But how exactly can a hacker get into a system to do these things?

Most hackers use information called protocols that are built into computer software. These protocols allow computers to interact with one another. Protocols are sort of like computer police officers. When a computer connects to another system, the protocols check to see if the access is valid. The protocols can also determine how much information can be shared between the two systems. Hackers can manipulate the protocols to get unlimited access to a computer system.

In fact, just the act of entering a computer network is considered hacking. This is commonly called passive hacking. Passive hackers get a rush from just being able to access a challenging system like a bank or military network. Another kind of hacker tries to do damage to a system. After hacking into systems, these hackers release viruses or alter, delete, or take information. Known as active hackers, they are, by far, the more dangerous of the two.

The easiest way to protect a system is with a good password. Long and unusual passwords are harder for hackers to guess. For even greater security, some online services now use “password-plus” systems. In this case, users first put in a password and then put in a second code that changes after the user accesses the site. Users either have special cards or devices that show them the new code to use the next time. Even if a hacker steals the password, they won't have the code. Or if the hacker somehow gets the code, they still don't know the password.

They say that parenting is the most important ‘job’ in the world. Undoubtedly, it is also one of the most difficult. In a world where imagination and a creative outlook are becoming more and more important to a person’s success, preparing children for life as a successful member of today’s society can be an extremely challenging task.

If you or someone you know is struggling to find the best way to raise well balanced and creative kids, the most important thing you can do is encourage children’s interests and help them find things they are good at. Here are a few tips that might help along the way.

First, limit TV and videogame time. Encourage your kids to play using their imagination to create their own games or role plays. Don’t limit playtime. Free playtime is important for young children to develop and discover their own creativity.

Get involved in playtime, but let your child take the lead. By following their lead, children can gain confidence in their own ideas. They may not be doing something the most efficient way, but that is not the point. Just have fun and let them figure it out. Don’t tell them they are doing something wrong. There is no status quo in playtime.

Expose your children to the arts early on. Encourage them if they have an interest in taking music, dance, or art lessons. Take them to local children’s theater productions, museums, and art galleries, as well as musicals, concerts, and ballets when they are ready.

Try to provide inspiration in your home. Fill your house with music and art of all kinds. Keep a box full of old clothes, wigs, and fabrics. Encourage your kids to play dress up. It really is a good way to get the imagination going, and it lets kids be creative in putting together interesting costumes and making up characters to go along. Make sure kids have a supply of basic art supplies on hand. The key here is ‘basic.’ Children do not need expensive, high-tech tools to become creative—quite the opposite. Simply buy the basics and a couple of books with art and craft ideas made from recycled items found around the house.

Listen to your children. Let them know you like their ideas. Everybody can be creative, and many children have hidden talents. Let your child try different things until they find what they are good at. Every child is good at something; the key to good parenting is finding what your child is good at and supporting them.

There are so many different forms and outlets for creativity. If you want to raise creative children, all you need to do is encourage them. Sometimes that means doing a little research and trying a few things to help them find what they like. And sometimes it means leaving them alone to play.
