

-Look! Your Dad his new book on TV!

-Yes, I like watching him do so. By the way, his book is really good. I have already read it.

-I know. That's a shame it's not on the internet. You can buy it only in bookshops in the downtown.

-I'm trying to him to start selling the book online, but Dad refuses. He strongly believes the best books are only paper ones.

-Probably, I can ask my boss to talk to your Dad. You know, he is a great IT specialist and believes that our future is with the Net. I have already told you lots of stories when my persuaded people do what he thought was right and in the end they did! All the in his company can prove it.

-That's a great idea! Perhaps, your boss and my Dad will some agreement.

-By the way, I need your help. Can you ... me?

-Sure! What's up?

-I will finish work very late today. My car is being serviced and I'm afraid to go home alone. Can you me home? We can have dinner with the wonderful cake I made this morning.

-Mmm...sounds great. I don't eat sweet things, but the company will be nice.)) See you tonight.