

Dear Dr. Daniel,

My mom spoils me. She does everything for me, even things I can do by myself. She prepares my sandwiches in the morning and puts them into my schoolbag. She drives me to school every morning. In the afternoon and in the evening, she drives me wherever¹ I want to go.

My mom never asks me to help her with the housework. She cleans my room, tidies my desk and puts my clothes away in the closet.

My mom wants me to be happy, so she lets me buy everything I want. When I ask her to give me some money, she never says no. I spend a lot of money on ¹⁰ clothes, but my mom doesn't mind², although she works very hard for her money.

I know that I should be more serious and responsible, but it's hard for me to change my ways³. Maybe it's because of my mother. What should I do? Should I tell her to stop spoiling me?
