I'm really shy, so I've never found it easy to start talking to people. I remember my first day at school. Everyone was chatting away and I just stood on my own, wishing I was brave enough to go up to someone and say 'Hi'. Luckily, I ended up sitting next to a really nice girl and she helped me get over my shyness.

There are lots of characteristics which are important in a good friendship. For me, the most important thing is honesty. I need to know that my friend will always tell me the truth. And, of course, they should be there for you when you need them. I know I can always count on my close friends. And let's not forget, a sense of humour is important too!

It's good to have loads of things in common with your friends, but I don't think it's necessary to do everything together. I love sport but I also love playing the guitar, so I have some friends who are sporty and others who are into music. They know one another, but they don't necessarily hang out together.

I think I'm pretty easygoing and I don't like having arguments with my friends, but just recently I found out that my best friend had been saying things about me and yet when I asked her about it, she denied it, so we're not speaking to each other. I feel sad that I've lost my best friend, but I'm sure it won't last long.

I've known Josie for ever! People who don't know us, think that we must be sisters because we're always together and we even look the same. Dad's got a new job, which means we're going to have to move, so Josie and I won't be able to see each other very often. At least we can call each other, but it won't be the same. I really hope that we don't lose touch.
